AZALEA RUTHERFORDIANA

This glorious new Azalea, a result of crossing three Azaleas with a Rhododendron, has earned an enviable place in the plant world. Profuse masses of blooms completely hide the foliage. Colors vary from pure white, pinks, salmons to crimson. The flowers are borne in trusses much like the Rhododendron.

Rutherfordiana can be forced to bloom for Christmas, Valentine's Day, winter months and Easter.

The flowers of Rutherfordiana will last much longer than any other variety. Try the individual florets for corsage work. Rutherfordianas are patented. They have won several gold medals for excellence.
